It is normal to lose approximately 1/3 up to 50% of the color during the healing process. After most procedures the color may be a shade too dark; six days it will appear to light. After 10 days the color will show more initially. It will appear softer when completely healed, as the color will come from the dermal layer of the skin to the epidural layer of the skin. And the event of a CAT scan or MRI, please inform your physician of you iron oxide permanent cosmetics as some pulling for burning sensation may occur during the procedure. (my ink are not iron oxide, but I would rather you tell your physician of your permanent make-up.)
